

Introducing the

Cambridge Conservation Initiative

Our continued existence on the earth depends on biodiversity and the natural capital it represents. Despite growing worldwide awareness of the perilous state of global biodiversity, measures to address conservation concerns are not being incorporated into mainstream policies and practices. Transformational approaches are therefore needed to understand, conserve and restore our planet's biodiversity.

The Cambridge Conservation Initiative (CCI) is a unique collaboration between the University of Cambridge and nine internationally-focused biodiversity conservation organisations. Our vision is to secure a sustainable future for biodiversity and society. To do this we must inform and help to shape long-term institutional responses to the challenges of biodiversity conservation.
